

Sanjay Kaul MD, FACC, FAHA

Cedars-Sinai Medical Center
Los Angeles, California, USA

Dr. Sanjay Kaul is a Cardiologist and Professor of Medicine at the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. Dr. Kaul received his medical training at the Government Medical College of the University of Kashmir in India. His residency in internal medicine was performed at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, and his cardiovascular training was completed at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics in Iowa City.

Dr. Kaul is a Fellow of the American Heart Association Councils on Circulation and Arteriosclerosis and Thrombosis, and a Fellow of the American College of Cardiology. He serves on several national committees of the American College of Cardiology and the American Heart Association, and has served on the FDA Cardiorenal Advisory Committee, the Institute of Medicine Comparative Effectiveness Research Methodology Committee, and the NIH study section on Biomedical Imaging and Bioengineering. He is on 9 editorial boards including the Journal of the American College of Cardiology and Circulation, and is an Associate Editor for Diabetes Care.

Dr. Kaul's clinical interests are in preventive cardiovascular medicine, diabetes, coronary artery disease, and cardiac intensive care. His research interests lie in the fields of thrombosis and vascular biology, acute coronary syndromes, clinical trial and statistical methodology and evidence-based medicine. He is a recognized expert in these areas and has published extensively in these areas.